The market over the past several weeks has experienced what we have come to call the summer lull. Although prices for most all classes are still at historically High levels we would call the market $.15-$.35 softer compared to the spring highs. We would expect this to be the norm over the next couple months. We will most likely see the light cattle have some form of an uptick as we get closer to winter, as this class has experienced the most price reduction of late. Feeder weight cattle not losing as much per pound yet still called softer, especially on a big calf. We would look for this market to be relatively steady until we get closer to spring.

Butcher cows not really losing any ground selling relatively steady right along, although we would caution this market could experience some weakness moving into and through fall. Bred cows and pairs selling with very good demand right along. We have not seen much of an offering since the summer sale but look forward to some good offerings in the coming weeks. Don't miss Wednesday, August 28 with a special offering of 100 head of fancy one iron close-up fall calvers or our 30th Annual Cattlemen's Select Bull Sale with 140 top end breeding Bulls and 75 fancy young close-up fall calvers! Any questions about the offering or how to consign to these special events, don't hesitate to call me.
